Representing a celebration of language as an expression of our diversity and humanity, the design includes key words from the UN resolution translated in indigenous languages. Highlighting the need for translation in maintaining accessibility and visibility of indigenous languages, this also heralds the upcoming UN Year of Indigenous Languages to be celebrated in 2019.

Cultural diversity is closely tied to linguistic diversity. Losing your language means losing a part of your cultural identity. Translation is important both to maintaining and learning from a culture.

Globalisation brings greater international cooperation, but the downside of that can be cultural homogenisation, which in turn threatens diversity. In an effort to access global markets effectively, products and services are often translated with sensitivity to the target culture, rather than imposing the culture of the source content. This type of translation, called localisation, thus supports diversity.

Each culture in the world should be in control of its destiny. By promoting diversity of cultures and languages, we can hope to create a world full of possibilities for learning, growing and sharing a peaceful vision for humanity based on mutual understanding and respect. We thank translators for their contribution to diversity as we celebrate International Translation Day 2017.
